HOT PURSUITS

While the notoriously difficult Bridgehampton Race Circuit, which closed in 1998, didn't draw a particularly artsy crowd, The Bridge, a golf course located on the racetrack's site, pays tribute to the former tenants by combining creativity and cars. The golf course's eponymous car show-meets-art gallery, which debuted last year, will return on September 16 with a fleet of vehicles circa 1957 to 1974—the period of time that marked the racetrack's glory years—and art from six leading galleries including Marlborough Contemporary, David Zwirner and CANADA gallery. The show is presented by watchmaker Richard Mille, whose first watch was inspired by F1 racing. "My watches are an expression of my love for all things technical, and automobiles in particular," says Mille. "The Bridge promises to showcase cars one might never see."

KEY TO THE CITY Adam Miller

CUP OF JOE

Jack's in Amagansett for the real rocket fuel. However, since my office is so close to Starbucks in Bridgehampton, every day at around 3pm I treat everyone to an afternoon cup to keep them on their toes.

POWER LUNCH

Candy Kitchen. Old school. Chicken over Greek (no onions). Estia's and Pierre's are certainly in my rotation.

COCKTAIL HOUR

Beacon in the summer. Since my client is the owner there is always a warm seat for me.

RETAIL THERAPY

I enjoy doing a round of retail therapy in East Hampton. On the weekends I take my two daughters and we can always find something to buy. Sometimes, it's a book at Bookhampton, sometimes a pair of workout shorts at Lulu. James Perse and Varvatos are a must.

FIELD TRIP

Longhouse Reserve, which is very close to my house. I can go there to meditate.

DATE NIGHT

East Hampton Grill. The food is so consistent even in the winter. My birthday is in February and the fire makes it cozy and warm.

HIDDEN GEM

The beaches anywhere along Napeague. It's where I proposed to my fiancée.

As the head of Adam Miller Group, P.C., the go-to real estate law firm based out of Bridgehampton, Adam Miller knows the East End. When he first made the move from Manhattan 10 years ago, Miller aimed to combine his large firm experience with localized knowledge, providing a niche, top-tier experience for the area's high-net-worth clients. Since then, the firm has acted as counsel on over $2 billion in real estate transactions. Says Miller, "The really important thing for me is big firm experience but local expertise." Miller has partnered with Brian Desesa, who brings a specialization in land use and 10 years of experience on the Southampton town zoning board, of which he is now Vice Chair. Having lived and worked on transactions in both Manhattan and the Hamptons, which does Miller prefer? "The Hamptons," he says, "I find it to be much more personal. [Clients] are often more engaged in this process because they're not passing this on to some associate who is handling that business. I enjoy it here because it's just easier to transact business that way, to meet people. Whereas in the city, most of the day is spent in a high rise." After a decade of living and working on the luxe Long Island enclave, Miller has discovered some top-notch places for everything from a business lunch to a mid-week meditation. We tapped the attorney for his list of the very best local spots.
